Guide to Cabo de Gata-Níjar Parque Natural

Cabo de Gata-Níjar Parque Natural is the last semi arid zone in Europe, a spectacular volcanic landscape.

By Nick Hulver | Last updated 22 Apr 2022 | 10 mins | Paris

Aljibe at Cabo de Gata

The Cabo de Gata is Born

With the force of 100,000 atomic bombs the earth erupted. A dark brown and grey pillar of smoke, ash and molten rock, over 200 metres wide shot into the air faster than the speed of sound to a height of over 20,000 metres. A double sonic boom would have been heard 300 kilometres away. Close to the expanding pillar, the sound was loud enough to split boulders. A solid wave of heat turned everything in its path to cinders and ash as it too travelled outwards at almost the speed of sound. The earth buckled and a series of waves rippled out from the centre as the ground absorbed the force of the explosion. As these waves met the sea only one kilometre away they caused tsunamis that reached a height of 20 metres that then sped across the Mediterranean Sea to crash onto the shores of North Africa only minutes later.

Creating the Calderas

Calderas and beaches

No human ears were assaulted by the noise, nor were any human eyes there to observe the pillar of fire illuminating the ash embroiled landscape for all this happened eight million
